ONE OF HOUDIN'S TRICKS

[Saturday Beview] The great Robert Houdin went, by royal command, 5 8 Cloud, as he rebefore Louis Phillippe and his family. In the course of the show he borrowed alx handkerchiefs from the audience. The various members of the audience wrote down on slips of paper the names of places where they would like the handkerchiefs transported. This done, the conjurer asked the King to choose three of these slips at random, and from the three select the place he preferred. "Come," said Louis, "Let us see what is on this slip. 'I should like to have them found under one of the candlesticks on the mantlepiece." "That is too easy for a wizard; let us try again." " 1 should like them to be found on the dome of the Invalides." "That is too far; not for the handkerchiefs, but for " Ah! you will, I fear, find it difficult to comply with the request on the last slip." The request was that the handkerchiefs should be found in the box of the last orange tree on the right hand of the avenue at St. Cloud. The conjurer expressed his readiness to comply with the request, and the King immediately sent off a party of men to keep guard over the orange tree. The conjurer put the handkerchiefs under a bell of thick glass, waved his wand, took up the bell, and showed a white dove in place of the handkerchiefs. Then the King, with a skeptical smile, sent orders to the head gardener to open the box of be a strange one here, for all the city the orange tree chosen, and to bring knows Miss Ida Henry. toutefois il y trouve quelque chose." in it?"

"Well!,, cried the King, "here peared near Lafayette, Indiana, and is we have a coffer. Are the handkerchiefs terrorizing the people. Mrs. Frank Coff-"Yes, sire,' replied Robert Houdin, "they have been there a long saw it the other day, and thus describes time." "A long time, when it is only a it: Mrs. Coffman was passing through quarter of an hour since they were given the timber, when she suddenly saw to to you?" "What, sire, would be the her right a hideous creature, formed like use of magic if it could not perform im- a woman, with long black hair floating possible feats? Your Majesty will be in the wind, and the whole body covered surprised when I prove to you that the with short gray hair. The creature was coffer and its contents have been in the breaking twigs from the sassafras bush box of the orange tree for sixty years." and eating the bark. The noise made in The King now observed that a key was breaking the bush prevented its hearing needed to open the box, and Robert Mrs. Coffman's approach. Frozen with Houdin asked him to take the key which horror, the farmers wife stood and gazed was hung by a ribbon around the white dove's neck. This was a key as rusty as the coffer which it opened, and the first thing found in the coffer was a parchment bearing these words: "To-day, June 6, 1786. This iron coffer, holding six handkerchiefs, has been placed amid the roots of an orange tree by me, Balsamo, Count of Cagliostro, to aid the accomplishment of a magical feat which will be done this day sixty years before Louis Phillippe of Orleans, and his family." Below the parchment lay a packet sealed with Cagliostro's seal, which was well known to the King, and in the packet were the six borrowed bandkerchiefs. "Ce tour," says Robert Houdin, and we can well believe it. "me valut de vifs applaudissements." When Mr. Bishop can do anything like this it mya be time to admit that he possesses a "strange talent."

"I say, Talleyrand," exclaimed Napoleon, as he threw himself back in the Tuileries rockingchair and lifted his boots to the top of the black walnut center table. "Sire," replied the astute Prince of Benevento, "I am listening." "Talley," continued the great Emperor, as he knocked the ashes of his five-cent Havana into the spittoon, "I've got another one. Why is the conductor of a street car who has been caught 'knocking down' like Josephine's new polka dot calico?" "Your Majesty, I give it up with the utmost alacrity." "Because," exclaimed the conquerer of Marengo, "he is spotted." (Talleyrand swoons and the Emperor jumps to his feet and rings the bell for the camphor bottle.)

A BABY ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

The Martinsburg correspondent of the Wheeling Intelligencer relates the following story: Almost every family here has some bit of romance in connection with the late war. To-day at a musicale, to which I was kindly invited, I met a lady whose talents as a musician and whose remarkable beauty attracted my attention. She possessed that rare type of prettiness that is wholly Southern. Great, deep blue eyes, the face perfect in every feature, hair rich in its abundance, and wonderful in its tint. This is her story: Twenty years ago, when the tide of battic in ong, bloody waves awept over the terrible field of Manasses, a baby girl was left an orphan on the battle ground. During the changes of the fateful day, the home of the blue-eyed girl was at one time directly between the fire of both armies. As the first shots whistled above the house the parents started to fice for a place of refuge. A dozen yards from the door both were shot down and the baby an orphan, without sister or brother, was alone in the world. The battle raged on, the dead and dying were everywhere, but the baby was unharmed. The day wore away, and just as the sun's last rays, half hidden in the curling smoke, sadly kissed the earth good night, General Jubal Early, riding by heard the baby's cries. He dismounted, and taking the little waif up, cared for it until he could place it under the care of his sisters. They watched it through its infantile years, giving it an education and a world of love, and now, that baby, grown to womanhood, lovely and accomplished, the pet of a wide circle of friends, who call her "Waif," is the sole support of these two women, sisters of the rebel General. Over these she sits directing musical offering, every inch a woman, noble and true. She talked to me modestly, and her beautiful eyes filled with tearn as she spoke of her two old friends.

BEAST OR HUMAN BEING!

If I should write her name it would not

A wild woman, or perhaps the mate of man, the wife of a well-known farmer, on the remarkable creature before her. Suddenly the wild woman turned, and, facing her clvilized sister, glared at her with a baleful light of hate. Raising her long, hairy arms, she gave an unearthly shrick and darted away into the forest. Almost paralyzed with fear, Mrs. Coffman gazed after the wild creature a moment: then, with agonized screams, she fled homeward. Her cries of fear attracted her husband, who was at work in the field, and he hastened toward her, reaching her side as her knees gave way with weakness resulting from mortal terror. He carried his wife to the house, gave the alarm, and soon half a hundred men and boys, accompanied by dogs, were on the trail of the wild woman. She was hotly pursued, and several times came near being caught, but eluded her pursuers with wonderful skill and cunning. For fully half a mile of the chase she was never out of sight. Her feet touched the ground but seldom. She would grab the underbrush with her long, bony hands, and swing from bush to bush and limb to limb with wonderful easc. She seemed only endeavoring to keep just beyond the reach of her pursuers, until, coming to a swamp, she disappeared as suddenly and effectively as an extinguished light, and no searching served to ascertain her whereabouts.

The trusted but thieving cashier of a Hartford concern has been driven crazy, owing to the detection of his crime. He was a member of the Church, a Sundayschool teacher, and a "devoted" husband. The object of his devotion and cause of his defalcation was a variety actress.
